

How to Fix a Wrong Name on a Singapore Airlines Booking

A small spelling mistake in a flight reservation can become a major concern when your travel date is approaching. If you notice an incorrect name on your booking, it is important to address the issue before check-in. Singapore airlines change name on ticket requests generally depend on whether you need a minor correction or are trying to transfer the ticket to another person. Can You Change a Name on a Singapore Airlines Ticket?

Singapore Airlines distinguishes between a name correction and a complete passenger name change. Tickets are generally non-transferable, meaning you cannot simply replace the original passenger with another traveler. However, eligible corrections may be possible when the issue involves a genuine name error. Singapore Airlines states that name changes are not supported in its NDC transactions, although a one-time correction for certain spelling errors may be allowed.

This distinction is important because correcting a typo is different from transferring a ticket. If your first or last name has been entered incorrectly, contact the airline or the travel agency that issued the ticket as soon as you discover the problem.

What Is Covered Under Singapore Airlines Name Correction?

The Singapore Airlines name correction process can apply to certain minor errors rather than a completely different passenger name. Published Singapore Airlines guidance has included corrections involving a limited number of characters, changes in salutation, certain married or maiden name corrections, and adding a middle name. Documentation may be required depending on the reason for the correction.

For example, if your passport says "John Smith" but your booking accidentally shows "Jon Smith," this may be treated differently from requesting that the ticket be changed from John Smith to another person's name.

The exact eligibility can depend on the ticket, itinerary, operating carriers, and booking channel. Therefore, it is better to request the correction before making other changes to the reservation.

How to Request a Name Correction

Start by checking the name printed on your ticket against your passport or other valid travel document. Identify exactly what is incorrect, such as a missing letter, incorrect sequence, or missing middle name.

Next, contact Singapore Airlines or the travel agency through which the ticket was purchased. Be ready to provide your booking reference, passenger details, ticket information, and supporting documentation if requested.

Singapore Airlines also provides forms and customer-service options for certain booking changes. If your reservation was made through an agency, the agency may need to coordinate the correction with the airline.

If you are unsure which procedure applies, getting assistance early can help you avoid problems close to departure. You can call +1-888-212-0809 for additional guidance about the correction process.

Is There a Singapore Airlines Name Change Fee?

The Singapore Airlines name change fee can depend on the type of request and the applicable booking rules. Travelers should not assume that every name correction carries the same charge. Singapore Airlines has published different guidance for different markets and booking situations, including changes to its trade-partner name-correction fee in 2025.

Some older or market-specific documents mention service fees, while newer guidance indicates that eligible requests may be handled differently. This means travelers should verify the applicable charge for their specific booking instead of relying on a general fee quoted elsewhere.

A fee may also be different from any fare difference or other ticket-related charge. Always ask what the total cost will be before authorizing a change.

What Is the Singapore Airlines Name Change Policy?

The Singapore Airlines name change policy generally separates legitimate corrections from passenger substitutions. A ticket is not transferable, and Singapore Airlines' conditions state that the passenger must be the person named on the valid ticket and provide appropriate identification.

This means you should not expect to use a normal name-change request to give your ticket to a friend or family member. If the passenger itself needs to change, the original ticket may need to be handled according to its fare conditions, and a new reservation may be required.

What If the Name Is Correct but Appears in a Different Order?

Some airline reservations display names differently from how they appear on passports. This does not automatically mean the ticket is incorrect. What matters is whether the passenger information can be correctly matched with the travel document.

Before requesting a correction, compare the booking details with your passport and ask the airline whether the displayed format requires action. Avoid making unnecessary changes if the information is already acceptable for travel.

Why Should You Fix the Error Before Departure?

A name discrepancy can create complications during check-in, document verification, or boarding. Singapore Airlines' conditions require passengers to have valid identification and a ticket issued in the passenger's name.

For that reason, do not wait until you reach the airport if you already know that a genuine error exists. Addressing the issue earlier gives the airline or travel agency more time to review the booking and request supporting documents.

If you need help understanding the available correction process, you can contact +1-888-212-0809 before making changes to your reservation.

Conclusion

A wrong name on a flight booking does not always mean you need to purchase a completely new ticket. Minor errors may qualify for correction, while a complete passenger substitution is generally not permitted because airline tickets are non-transferable. Check your booking carefully against your passport and contact Singapore Airlines or your booking agency as early as possible. For additional assistance with a singapore airlines change name on ticket request, call +1-888-212-0809.
