Understanding Manufactured Homes and the Role of Impresa Modular

Manufactured homes are, simply put, factory-built residences that comply with strict HUD requirements. Often dubbed modular or custom modular homes, they benefit from factory-based construction processes that allow for material efficiency, enhanced build quality, and rapid project completion. The Italian term "impresa modular" also relates to the concept of modular construction companies, or factories, that specialize in assembling these homes with precision.

These homes are presented by UMH in multiple building plans and sizes—often between 1,000 and 1,700 sqft—designed to accommodate diverse homeowner preferences. With this range, Anderson, Indiana buyers are able to match their new home to both space and budget needs. This type of factory-built design leads to energy efficiency, which carries long-term savings on residents' utility payments.
